Gas Lights Make Strong Comeback

Outdoor recreation areas are taking on new luster this summer as more and more homeowners discover that the installation of modern gas lights not only adds charm and tradition but solves a practical problem as well.

The decorative, eye-catching function of gas lights for patios, terraces, gardens, along walks and driveways is already well established in homes throughout the southland.

But under the soft glow of gas lighting, families can also enjoy patio and garden living by night, thus extending outdoor dining and entertaining time.

Howard Johnson, sales manager of the gas company's Southwest division, pointed out that a summer-time campaign among appliance dealers has resulted in greater availability and improved installation services for gas lights.

Dealers are displaying a large variety of gas models from which customers can choose. These range from portable units for indoor and outdoor use to built-in units permanently installed on patios or terraces at economical rates.

Families find the mellow glow of gas lamps ideal for evening cooking. Ample working light is provided, yet the setting is never spoiled with brightness or glare. Instead, gas light is similar to moonlight, casting a soft, flattering glow over the outdoor scene.

JUST AS important, insects are not attracted to gas light. Unlike filament-type lamps.

SOFT GLOW . . . Gas lights extend outdoor dining and entertaining time as well as performing decorative functions, Howard Johnson, Southwest division sales manager for Southern California Gas Co., explains to local homeowner Bonnie Ricketts and Dave Lackstrom of the gas company. Appliance dealers are now offering gas lights at an "installed" price, Johnson said.
